Questions 29 to 31 refer to the following information

How to sing better if you think you are bad

Ever had those times where one of your relatives or friends wanting to hear your singing voice, but you are afraid of the fact that you think you are bad at singing. Follow these simple steps to improve it.

Drink water. Aim to have at least one pint a of water day. Water is very good for the body as well as your vocal chords. However, the reason you should have it a lot is because it will take time to reach your vocal chords. Be sure to do vocal exercises. Try easy ones to begin with such as saying SSSHHH at your loudest without damaging your throat. Another good exercise is to sing numbers from one to five ascending and descending in pitch. This is great for finding your scale.

Practice tongue twisters. Along with the vocal exercises, try some tongue twisters. They make the vowels sound clearer. Repeat tongue twisters at least five times a day and twice right before you sing. A good one would be "How much wood would a wood chuck chuck if a wood chuck chucked wood?" or "She sells sea shells on the sea shore." Another fun thing to do is to repeat red lorry, yellow lorry as many times as you can before you begin to slur.

Mature your voice. If you are still young and want to mature your voice, then start humming. Humming warms up the vocal chords and gets them used to moving and vibrating.

Drink warm drinks. Warm drinks are good for warming up your throat. Drink something such as warm tea with honey and avoid ice creams or cold fizzy drinks.
